FEARFUL WORLD AWAITS RESULTS OF ASSASSINATIONS

Immediate Action Taken To Avert a "Marseilles
Sarajevo"

HAVE GRAVE FEARS

One More Death is Added to List As Spectator Is Victim

By International News Service
A fearful world today awaited repercussions of the Marseilles Sarajevo as France today paid homage to the two European strong men, assassinated on her soil, King Alexander of Yugoslavia and French Foreign Minister Louis Barthou.

Grief-stricken, Alexander's consort, Queen Marie reached his side as preparations were made to return his bullet-pierced body to Belgrade aboard a warship.

Jugoslavia's new King, 11-year-old Peter, eldest son of the slain monarch, left his school in the English countryside and prepared to return to his capital to rule under a regency provided in Alexander's will.

From Belgrade, London and Vienna came unconfirmed reports of disturbances in Yugoslavia. Troops were massed to prevent possible invasion and to quell revolutionary outbreaks feared as a result of the slaying of the nation's king and dictator.

The situation in France itself was acute with new rioting feared there. The government was gravely weakened by the loss of Barthou, outstanding apostle of peace in present day Europe.

MARSEILLES, France, Oct. 10.—The death toll in the virtual massacre that accompanied the assassination of King Alexander and Foreign Minister Barthou was increased today by the death of Mme. Durbech, a spectator who was shot by one of the murderer's bullets. Representatives of the War Office said the condition of General Georges of the Supreme French War Council, also shot in the attack, was "satisfactory" following the removal of a bullet from his abdomen.

PARIS, Oct. 10.—(INS)—Europe today awaited in fearful anticipation a possible international crisis resulting from the assassination of King Alexander of Yugoslavia and Foreign Minister Louis Barthou of France, while cooler diplomatic heads in every capital went into immediate action to avert a "Marseilles Sarajevo."

In the heat of the excitement of the double murder, intimately involving the politics of every continental country, grave fears were felt everywhere, but sober thought expressed in authoritative quarters minimized the probability of international conflict.

That the carefully built-up plan to encircle Germany in a ring of pacts guaranteeing maintenance of the "status quo," and terminating Italy-Yugoslavian friction, M. Barthou's work of months, had collapsed was, however, admitted in diplomatic circles.

The visit of the King to Paris, simultaneously with the scheduled trip of M. Barthou to Rome, was to have solidified France's ascendancy over the "Little Entente," and at the same time reconcile Italy and Yugo-Slavia—moves that would help in maintaining Austrian independence.

While these important steps towards consolidating the peace in a suspicious Europe had been definitely set back, an outbreak of war was hardly even a remote possibility, it was stated. Europe is not ready to march and armed force is in no way called for in view of the fact that the King was slain by one of his own countrymen, a Croatian who resented infringements upon the autonomy of the Croatian minority in Yugo-Slavia.

MARSEILLES, Oct. 10.—(INS)—Stricken and worn, but bearing up in queenly fashion, Queen Marie of Yugo-Slavia arrived here by special train early this morning to look upon the dead body of King Alexander—at whose side she was to have ridden in triumph through Paris today.

"Take me to him at once," she said, as she stepped from the train. She drove off immediately to the prefecture where the body of the King, shot to death by a Croatian assassin, lay in state under the French tri-color, flanked by two French mobile guards.

Queen Marie sped here from Bessancon, where her special train had been halted and the city's prefect had told her that her husband and Foreign Minister Louis Barthou were dead.

BELGRADE, Oct. 10.—(INS)—Yugoslavian and Austrian troops guarded either side of the northern frontier, and rioting was reported from Zagreb, in Croatia, as a dazed nation of mixed nationalities learned today for the first time that King Alexander was dead, and a regency ruled in his place.

The government withheld the news just long enough to organize forces to cope with rebellious outbreaks that seemed inevitable following the assassination.

SLAIN ALEXANDER AND HIS WIDOW AND MALE HEIRS

SUIT GROWS OUT OF SALE OF AUTOMOBILE

Auto Dealer Seeks to Recover
Balance of Payment
On the Car

JUDGE BOYER PRESIDES

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 10.—Trial began Monday in the case of Milton Moose, of Quakertown, to the use of the Commercial Credit Company vs. John Reith, of Zion Hill, with Judge Calvin S. Boyer presiding. The plaintiffs hope to recover possession of a sedan, valued at $575, and damages amounting to $1150.

Reith, the defendant, testified that he bought a sedan November 9, 1929, and agreed to pay $1652.32.

Robert A. Caldwell, credit manager for the Commercial Credit Co., as a witness for the plaintiffs, testified that the sum of $500 was paid at the time of execution of the lease, and that the balance, $1152.32, was to be paid in 16 monthly installments of $72.02 each.

According to the statement of claim, the defendant defaulted August 9, 1930. It is also alleged that an employee of the Commercial Credit Co. made a mistake and that the title certificate was marked "satisfied," although there was a balance of $576.16 due the plaintiffs.

Moose, a Quakertown automobile dealer, delivered the car to the defendant, and allowed him the sum of $500 for his old car which was turned in during the transaction.

Charles P. Alta, a Bristol constable, testified that he went to Quakertown on Saturday armed with a search warrant, but was unable to locate or find Moose.

The suit grew out of alleged damages for the unlawful detention of the car.

Resuming trial D. E. Moran, of Upper Darby, a former credit manager of the Commercial Credit Company, testified that on January 27, 1931, the defendant's account was closed out by journal entry and the papers returned in error to the Bethlehem branch office.

Additional witnesses included Miss Dorothy Wood, a bookkeeper of the Philadelphia office, and K. G. Stier, formerly manager of the Bethlehem office, but now credit manager of the York office.

HELD IN LINDBERGH CASE

Smethport, Oct. 10.—Harmon G. Lippert, 44-year-old New Jersey carpenter, was detained on a charge of violating the Firearms Act today while State Police investigated "a possible connection with the Lindbergh kidnapping case."

Lippert, a carpenter of Pompton Lakes, N. J., was carrying a loaded revolver when his automobile was stopped near Larabee, Pa. His car contained carpenter's tools and an ample supply of food, authorities stated. A search of his clothing revealed $48.62 and later $150 was found secreted in a purse.

State Police declined to say whether any of this money was part of the Lindbergh ransom money. They admitted however they were checking with New Jersey authorities and Department of Justice agents. Their only admission was that there was a "possible connection with the Lindbergh case."

KIDNAPPING CHASE, EXTENDING THROUGH 16 STATES, SHOWS THE NEED FOR FEDERAL POLICE

Continuing the Inside Story of the Methods of the Department of Justice Operators in Trapping Kidnappers

By International News Service
(Copyright, 1934, International News Service, Inc.)

The story of "Mr. X," who was the instrument through which the Department of Justice completed the solution of one of its most notable cases is told in this, the seventh installment of a series on the life of J. E. Hoover, director of division of investigation, Department of Justice.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 10.—(INS)—Three thousand miles Kathryn and George ("Machine Gun") Kelly fled, but they couldn't get away.

That final, desperate gesture, the hiring of a total stranger, "Mr. X," to mediate with the Federal authorities, revealed the pressure under which they were, and the D. J. men knew it wouldn't be long. So, when Mr. X went to Fort Worth, on Sept. 4, to contact Mrs. Kelly's lawyer, it was the beginning of the end.

Mr. X saw the lawyer, then returned to Cleburne, Tex., where he had left his wife and child with Mrs. Kelly. Then he was sent to Oklahoma City, to watch the trial of the Shannons, Bailey, Bates, and others. He returned to San Antonio and got at the general delivery window in the post office directions to proceed to an address in that town, where he found George and Kathryn Kelly, his wife and child. Kelly left the next morning, never to return.

Borrowed Daughter

Kathryn Kelly then borrowed Mr. X's daughter, for a trip of "about 250 miles," and sent Mr. X to Oklahoma City again, leaving Mrs. X at San Antonio. Later Mrs. X was advised to go on to her husband at Oklahoma City, as Mrs. Kelly was being kept longer than she had expected.

Hoover's men by now were fully in control of Mr. X, and through him played the Kellys into a trap.

Mr. X had been armed with a letter by Mrs. Kelly to her father, J. E. Brooks, at Oklahoma City, requesting that Brooks give him a pistol and any available money for lawyers, and it was in the course of that procedure that the D. J. men got control.

Miss X came back to Oklahoma City, Sept. 25 and the D. J. men learned she had left the Kellys at Memphis with a person known to her only as "Titch."

When Hoover learned of this by telephone he ordered special agents to Memphis by airplane from Birmingham, St. Louis and Kansas City. They arrived in Memphis without the knowledge of even the city police to whom they went early in the morning of September 26 and asked assistance in a raid on the home of J. C. Tichenor. Headlines told of the way that the noisy, dangerous Kellys was caught before he had a chance to move a finger. His wife was with him.

CONVICT DECORATED

SOFIA.—(INS)—Anton Prudkin, once mayor of Sofia and an inmate prisoner in the State Prison since 1924, was decorated by King Boris for his work on the carvings and decorations of the prison church, now considered one of the most beautiful chapels in the world.

COLOGNE.—(INS)—A penniless unemployed man found 25,000 marks ($5,000 at par) hidden in the mattress of a bed which he was given by a relief worker 15 years ago. But he is no better off financially. The money is valueless—the bills are prewar currency, long since outlawed.

Roll Call

Red Cross Roll Call in the Southeastern Pennsylvania Chapter, including the five counties of Bucks, Chester, Delaware, Montgomery and Philadelphia, begins on Red Cross Sunday, October 14.

"The goal of $200,000 needed to meet the Chapter's expenses for the last four months of 1934 and all of 1935 cannot be raised by memberships alone," said Col. J. Franklin McFadden, Chapter chairman. "More of the higher forms of membership and additional larger gifts are needed."

"Red Cross is a service, not an unemployment relief organization. It needs your support now to carry on its normal year-round activities which include: assistance to war-disabled ex-service men and their dependents, the support of the suburban counties, the volunteer production of clothing for the needy, the volunteer production of books in Braille writing for the blind, instruction in First Aid and Water Life Saving, recreational work among patients in Government hospitals, and the Character building work of the Junior Red Cross in our public schools."

"Last, but probably best known, the Red Cross must be kept ready at all times to give aid at a moment's notice to victims of disaster. Twice during the last fifteen months the victims of the flooded districts of Eastwick and Tinicum turned to the Red Cross, and their call for assistance was promptly answered."

Bride of W. T. Taylor,
Elkins Park

TO RESIDE IN BRISTOL

An autumnal wedding of interest took place yesterday afternoon at four o'clock in St. James's Episcopal Church, when Miss Elizabeth H. Runyan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stanford K. Runyan, 910 Radcliffe street, became the bride of William T. Taylor, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert K. Taylor, Elkins Park.

The officiating clergyman was the Rev. George E. Boswell, rector of the church.

Miss Alena Rezantsevi, Wilmington, Del., as maid of honor; Mrs. William H. Skirm, 34, Philadelphia, Mrs. Vanuxem Morris, Langhorne, and Miss Elizabeth LaRue, Bristol, cousins of the bride, with Mrs. Sherman G. Coates, Philadelphia, acting as bridesmaids, were Mrs. Taylor's attendants.

Herbert K. Taylor, Jr., Elkins Park, brother of the groom, served as best man, while the ushers included Thomas Taylor, Jenkintown, Joseph Sullivan, Elkins Park, Paul Sharpless, Swarthmore, and William Brosius, Berwyn.

Mrs. Taylor wore a gown of white lace interthreaded with silver, made on distinctively plain lines. The neck was fashioned high and round and the gown buttoned in the back from the neck to the waist line. The sleeves were long, tight-fitting, and ended in points on the wrists. The skirt had a slight train. The long veil was of Brussels lace and fell in soft folds from a cap of lace. Mrs. Taylor carried bridal roses and valley lilies.

Miss Rezantsevi, the maid of honor, was gowned in an autumnal shade of brown-toned lace, threaded with gold. The front neck line was high and rounded, and the back was decollete effect. The frock was fashioned on silhouette lines, flaring from the knees. A crushed girdle of rust-toned velvet, whose long ends formed a train, was the only adornment. The sleeves were long and tight-fitting. With this costume, Miss Rezantsevi wore rust-toned sandals and a brimmed hat of rust-hued velvet, trimmed with a brown lace horsehair veil and a corded band of brown satin tied in a soft bow on the left side. Her flowers were bronze-toned chrysanthemums.

The bridesmaids were gowned similarly in rust-toned lace, modeled with V-necks, front and back, sleeveless, and ending in slight trains. The frocks were made on slim lines and flared from the knees. With these

Information concerning the Lehigh Coal & Navigation Company canal in Roosevelt State Park was given the members in a communication from Lewis E. Staley, secretary of Department of Forests and Waters. Secretary Staley commented on the operation of the canal in the Roosevelt State Park, stating that it is believed by the department that it will require $30,000 per year for the next six years to maintain the canal. It was pointed out in this letter also that while the average annual expenditure is slightly more than $21,000, the canal is in a poor state of repair, and extensive improvements will be required in the near future.

Members of the association in this communication were given an idea as to the popularity of the canal, when it was stated that approximately 100,000 persons annually use this body of water for large parties, bathing, canoeing, picnicking, hiking, horseback riding, fishing and skating.

CHANCE AS DETECTIVE

How often chance plays the leading role in detective work is illustrated in the arrest of the suspected chief figure in the Lindbergh kidnaping and murder.

The nation's best detective minds—federal, state and local—had been at work on the Lindbergh case for more than two years. Practical-minded sleuths had run down innumerable clues. Others had exercised their faculties of deduction on one of the most puzzling crime mysteries in decades. Several suspects had been arrested at one time or another only to be released for the lack of sufficient evidence to connect them with the kidnaping.

Then came the break, not through what can be properly termed shrewd detective work but in a prosaic manner such as might occur in any case. The taking of the serial number of the gold certificates used by Colonel Lindbergh in paying the $50,000 ransom handed over to the supposed kidnapers was a routine procedure, but, if Hauptmann proves to be the actual kidnaping or if his arrest leads to the final solution of the mystery, it will have proved to be the vital factor in the investigation. It did not offer great promise at first. It soon became a public matter that the serial numbers had been taken, which placed the kidnapers on guard in connection with spending any of the ransom money. Several of the bills, however, eventually were found, but the task of tracing the passers proved an impossible one to the nation's master detective minds.

Then, almost out of a clear sky, came the incident at the New York filling station when Hauptmann paid for gasoline with one of the ransom bills. It is doubtful if the filling station attendant would have taken particular notice of this had it not been that the private possession of gold notes had been made unlawful. His suspicions naturally were aroused, and this caused him to report the incident to the police after writing down the number of the passer's automobile license.

From the police standpoint, luck, rather than shrewd detective work, gave Hauptmann into the hands of the authorities. This, nevertheless, doesn't mean that the federal agents and police who took part in the investigation are not deserving of credit. Much hard work had been done on the case by them. Despite slow and uncertain progress in solving the case, they had refused to give up and remained as vigilant as in the early days of an investigation. This vigilance was an important element in what may prove to be the answer to the question that had troubled them for more

GIRL IN THE FAMILY" BY BEATRICE BURTON

SYNOPSIS

Susan Broderick, young and pretty member of a poor but aristocratic family, is engaged to Wallace Steffen, promising young banker. Susan is exceptionally fond of Wallace but is not sure that she loves him. Although she doesn't realize it, Susan is more attracted by Allen Sholes, the new roomer, whom her snobbish relatives ignore. Uncle Worthy, his wife Edna and Aunt Lutie, still consider themselves the cream of society and will not tolerate anyone they regard beneath them. That is why they discourage Susan's and John's (her brother) friendship for Uncle Arthur Cullen and his family, their late mother's relatives. A few days before Christmas, John, tired of his relatives' superior attitude, upbraids them for being snobbish. He stalks out of the room, asking Susan to go with him to the Cullens who were always ready for company. Fearing family disapproval, Susan refuses. Just then Allen appears and John invites him to go to a place where there's "real" people. Wallace calls, but Susan cannot warm to his caresses. He speaks of the Country Club house he is interested in for their future home, but Susan is not enthusiastic for the reason that the present owners are forced to give it up because of financial reverses.

CHAPTER XIII

The clock in the reception room struck once for half past eight as she turned back into the hall. Half past eight. Supper time, and John and Mr. Sholes would probably be out in the kitchen helping the girls with the dishes. They would be laughing and talking, having a fine invigorating time. Mary would be looking very domestic with her sleeves rolled up on her white arms, as she washed dishes, and her eyes would shine like emeralds under the unshaded kitchen lights.

A little after eleven she heard John and Mr. Sholes come up the stairs together, and a minute afterward John tapped on her door. "I saw that your light was on," he said when she opened it, "and I thought that you might like to start this tonight. Mary sent it to you."

He handed her a new novel of Hugh Walpole's. Mary often sent new books over to her when they came in to the library.

"How did Mr. Sholes and the Cullens get on?" she asked.

"Like a house afire," John laughed. "Old Mary certainly went after him in a big way. She got out her banjo and went through the whole book of blues for him, and Sara made waffles and coffee just before we left. He had a darned good time, and I was sure glad after the awful thing that the family gives him around this house."

Susan went back to bed and opened the Walpole book. But she did not read it. She lay thinking about Mary Cullen. . . . No doubt, Mary had a way with men. A flirtatious way of sweeping her long eyelashes up and down at them like Becky Sharp, a friendly way of asking them all about themselves and then sitting back to listen with wide-eyed interest when they answered her. But there was more to her than just a little bag of coquettish tricks. She was really entertaining with her banjo and her husky voice. She talked well and she had a good laugh. Almost any man would think her an unusually pleasant companion even if she had no beauty at all.

Besides her own attractions, she had the attractions of the Cullen house for a background. Susan went on thinking. Aunt Nell's pantry was always filled with delicious things to eat, and there was a radio, a piano and a phonograph, for music if the young people wanted to dance. Aunt Nell and Uncle Arthur usually spent the evening upstairs in the sitting room, too, so that the girls and their friends had the whole house to themselves. It would have been remarkable if Mr. Sholes had not had a good time there after the wintry airs of the Center Street house.

"I could be interesting to him, too, if I had half a chance," thought Susan. "Even if I can't play the banjo like a dandy."

who had always been her favorite. Cullen. Mary had so many admirers. Why had she had to reach out after Mr. Sholes?—Just another scalp for her belt.

All at once it flashed across Susan's mind that she was thinking of Mary Cullen as her rival. Why, it was none of her affair what Mary did or did not do to fascinate Mr. Sholes! The best thing she could do was to put them both out of her mind and go to sleep.

She switched off the light, bunched her pillow under her head and closed her eyes, her left hand with Wallace's ring on it like a seal, pressed under one cheek.

At the breakfast table on Christmas morning Susan opened Wallace's Christmas package. Inside

From the opposite side of the table Susan's father lifted his voice in surprise and indignation. He half rose in his chair and his angry glance went quickly from Aunt Edna's face to Lutie's. "Those are mine—to give away or not to give away, as I see fit."

Aunt Edna looked at him, her lips parted in an O of astonishment. "Way, Morris, you don't have any use for these things," she said, "and they were Susan's mother's. They're all marked with a 'C' for Cullen."

Morris Broderick smiled, his small dark mustache lifting to show his full red lips. "He was much smarter than usual this morning, with a wing collar and a white piping in his vest."

"As a matter of fact, I am going to have a use for them," he said.

Mary was really entertaining with her banjo and her husky voice.

the gold paper was a gray jeweler's box and inside the box was a neat little wrist watch set with baguette diamonds.

"My word! But he's simply showering you with diamonds, Childie!" Lutie cried when she saw it. "It matches the ring, doesn't it? He probably got them both at the same place."

She picked up the lid of the gray box. "This came from Sigler's," she said. "Is that where he bought the ring?"

"I don't know," Susan snapped the bracelet around her wrist. "Some day she would ask Wallace about the ring box from the Ludlow and Ludlow store."

"We aren't giving you a real present, this year, Susan," Lutie said, getting up from the table, "because you'll have to have so many things for your trousseau. But your Aunt Edna and I went up into the attic the other day and got together some of your mother's things that we thought you'd like to have now that you're going to have a home of your own."

She took a large pasteboard box from the top of the sideboard that ran almost the entire length of the dining room wall and set it down in front of Susan. It was tied with holly-patterned ribbon, and it was filled to the top with linen. Tablecloths and napkins, all of them monogrammed with the letter "C." They were yellow with time, but they were smooth and glossy as if they had been ironed the day before. On the very top of them was a flat blue velvet case which revealed a row of silver teaspoons

"Mrs. Hopper and I are going to be married tomorrow afternoon."

He glanced around the table to see how everyone was taking his news before he went on.

"The children are grown now. John's earning his own living, and Susan's going to be married, so at last I feel free to live my own life." "You do, do you?" This was from Aunt Edna. "Well, that is certainly a priceless remark, coming from you! Just tell me when you've ever done anything for either of the children, Morris Broderick! They've been my job for fifteen or sixteen long years, and don't you forget it! You've been as free as a bachelor!—Once in a while you've told John to stick to his college career, but just try to recollect a single dollar that you ever gave him for it—"

"Who fed him and kept a roof over his head?" interrupted his father. "I didn't, I suppose?"

Aunt Edna sniffed. "Sometimes you paid his board here and some times you didn't—and you know it."

"Well, let's not do all this fussing on Christmas day in the morning," begged Lutie, showing most of her teeth in one of her brightest and most strained smiles. "I think we've all helped to bring up John and Susan, and we've done a beautiful job with them. They're nice children—but this news about you and Mrs. Hopper, Morris! It's wonderful!—And you know they say all good things come in threes, so now that you and Susan are getting married maybe I'll be the next one to find a mate. Stranger things have happened!"

The Newspaper As An Advertising Medium

Newspaper advertising produces immediate action. Speed distinguishes a newspaper's birth, life and functions.

Newspaper advertising tells where to buy. It never lets a prospect get cold.

Newspaper advertising enables the advertiser to check results. He knows what he gets for his newspaper advertising dollar anywhere and everywhere he elects to advertise.

Newspaper advertising costs less than any other kind.

Newspaper advertising insures dealer good-will. You do not have to sell local newspaper advertising to the retailer; he knows what it will do for him.

The newspaper advertiser selects his markets and "Goes where the going is good."

Newspaper advertising is timely. It permits the advertiser to tie his copy up with current news events. "Newsvertising" is a product of the ability to spot copy quickly.

Newspaper advertising enlists many aids to distribution. There is no source of information as thoroughly informed on any given market as the newspaper that serves that market.

Each good newspaper fits its market as a key fits a lock; knows its market like a book; serves it with zeal and pride.

Kidnapping Chase Shows Need for Federal Police

Other information from Miss X caused Department of Justice men to descend upon the Cassey Coleman ranch at Coleman, Tex., where they got $73,250 of the Urschel cache. They also got Cassey Earl Coleman and Will Casey for harboring the Kellys. Cassey and Coleman got prison terms. J. C. Tichenor and Langford Ramsey were convicted at Jackson, Tenn., of harboring the Kellys. No one who had even a minor part in the case was allowed to escape.

Cites Vital Statistics

Thus went the Urschel case. The magnitude of the search which led to its solution, shows how helpless State authorities are in such cases, and only federal detective work is necessary. Here are some statistics on the case: 1. Agents chased through 16 States, Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, Kansas, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota,

Wisconsin, Illinois, Tennessee and Kentucky.

2. The kidnapping occurred in Oklahoma, the victim was held in Texas.

3. The ransom money was paid in Missouri. Part of it was recovered in Texas and part in Minnesota.

4. Guilty parties were found in Colorado, Tennessee, Texas, Minnesota, and Illinois.

5. The area in which arrests were made and the kidnapping occurred covered about 83,000 square miles—more than all of middle Europe, with France, England, Italy, Scotland and Wales thrown in.

6. Fifteen persons were convicted and six of them given life terms.

And all were brought to heel within 60 days after Urschel's bridge game was interrupted.

Mild coughs often yield to lesser helps. No one can tell. No one knows which factor will do most for any certain cough. So careful people, more and more, are using Creomulsion for any cough that starts.

The cost is a little more than a single help. But your druggist is authorized to guarantee it, so it costs nothing if it fails to bring you quick relief. Coughs are danger signals. For safety's sake, deal with them in the best way known.—(Advertisement).

BENSALEM GRIDDERS TO OPEN SEASON AT HOME

With two games already played on foreign fields, the Blue and White gridders of Bensalem high will inaugurate the home football season, Friday, with their arch rival, Langhorne, as the opponent.

After administering an 18-0 defeat to Newtown, Bensalem journeyed to Willow Grove and was defeated by the Upper Moreland eleven, 12-0.

The play of the line in both games has been good, but the backfield play needs plenty of tuning up for the remaining games. Bill Lance, quarterback and ace of the backfield, was injured at Upper Moreland, and will probably not be able to play against Langhorne.

Bensalem is anxious to avenge last year's last minute 6-0 defeat at the hands of Langhorne, and will fight hard to take this game. Play will start at 3:30 p. m. sharp. The following Friday, October 19th, Pemberton (N. J.) High will play on the Bensalem field.

Peter H. 11 years old, was on his way here from his English school to take the throne that was given to him by proclamation yesterday. The army and navy have already taken an oath of loyalty to him, the proclamation said.

Prince Paul, cousin of the slain king, will head the regency. He will carry out the stern, uncompromising rule of Alexander, it is believed, and more trouble from the Croatian and other racial minorities is an immediate prospect.

Not the least disturbing of the many rumors that flooded Belgrade today was a report that Prince George, Alexander's ruler brother, who renounced his rights to the throne because he displeased his father, and
